ART 0353A - Ancient Art and Archaeology
MW 2:00PM-3:50PM
This course will explore the roots of ancient Mediterranean culture in the Ancient Near East. Mesopotamia and Egypt produced urban cultures beginning in the 4th millennium BCE. These early urban cultures provided the seeds for the Late Bronze Age cultures of the Levant, the Aegean and Anatolia. These in turn formed the breeding ground for Mediterranean culture of the 1st millennium BCE: the foundation of the modern "western" world. An exploration of the past 100+ years of archaeological research and our resulting knowledge of ancient art and architecture will elucidate these processes. Prerequisite: Junior standing, or (1) REL 226; or (2) ART 222; or (3) ANTH 229.

CJCR 345A Special Topics: Domestic Terrorism
TTH 01:00PM-02:50PM
This course is designed to provide the student with an understanding of issues and factors relating to one aspect of criminal behavior: domestic terrorism. The initial focus will be to define and identify "domestic terrorism" historically and currently by examining the actors’ similar motivations, backgrounds, and actions. This will allow for consideration of the causes of, as well as trends in, domestic terrorism. Additionally the course will review the unique problems inherent with their detection as a genuine criminal threat, successful prosecution, and appropriate punishment in light of the First Amendment and other applicable provisions of law. Finally, the class will consider the consequences of domestic terrorism on society in general.

PHIL 340 A Special Topics: Science, Mind, and Culture
MWF 12:45PM- 1:50PM
Human minds and human culture are complex and intertwined. As a result, several sciences- including Archaeology, Biology, and Psychology- are required to understand "who we are and how we got to be this way." This interdisciplinary project will investigate philosophical questions about the study of the human mind and its relationship to Archaeology, Biology, Psychology, and culture. In the first part of the course, we will think about philosophical questions that arise for each one of these sciences independently. For example, the role of adaptation in Biology and Psychology, the nature of mental concepts, the relationship between thought and language, and the use of artifacts and models as evidence. In the second part of the course, we will turn towards the challenges and benefits of integrating these disciplines in an attempt to inform our views about human nature, cultural change, and the mind's interaction with the world.
Prerequisite: one course in philosophy or consent of the instructor.

REL 337W A Biblical Topics: Genesis
TTH 9:45AM- 11:35AM
Genesis is a story of beginnings in the Bible, setting both a universal context and a relational context centered around God’s covenants with his creation and humanity as a whole, and with the particular family of Abraham. This course explores these various traditions conveyed in the biblical book of Genesis within their appropriate historical, political, cultural, literary and theological contexts. Students utilize various scholarly approaches and methods to better understand the larger biblical message. This is an upper-level seminar offered as writing intensive, and thus incorporates a variety of written assignments and attention to the writing process.

Scholars 301 A: "Sanitation: the real poop"
T 12:00PM-12:50PM
While even children’s books teach us that “everyone poops”, what happens to our waste has major impacts on health and the environment. This seminar will also examine cultural and historical aspects of how we deal with excreta, and problems with aging infrastructure.

SPAN 426 A—Advanced Spanish through Literature and Film
TTH 9:45AM- 11:35AM
We will analyze a variety of literature as well as important films from both Spain and Latin America. Readings include poetry, theater, novels, and short stories. The integration of film and literature promotes the examination, interpretation, and analysis of socio-cultural contexts through themes including love and passion, power and violence, family and gender issues, and questions of morality.
Prerequisites: Two Spanish courses at the 300 level, or consent of instructor. May be repeated for credit with consent of instructor.
