Ada Carter Remley: Williamsport business woman

Ada Carter Remley (1902-1983) possessed all the characteristics of a woman shaped by many 21st century women.

She valued education, pursued a number of careers, supported community causes, nurtured her home life and remained an integral part of the community of women.

With her mother, Ada’s grandfather, came to Lackawanna County from Connecticut and established the extremely successful Carter’s Cuppawo Works, which claimed to make anything but the very best ax, a favorite of lumbermen.”

He also came with a background in the great 19th century Concord philosophers, and donated the land for the first public school in the Scranton area.

Ada’s father, Palaski Pliny Carter, was a Scranton businessman who educated all of his children at colleges in the eastern U.S.

Early years

Ada B. Carter graduated from Smith College in 1918. The yearbook lists her as a member of the Physics Club. She then pursued several professional interests.

After working as a teacher at the Mary Lyon School in Swarthmore and as an executive secretary for the American Red Cross in Scranton, she co-founded the education at the School of Social Work in Philadelphia, subsequently assuming positions of responsibility in that field of work.

Ada married in her late-20s, but she and her husband, Donald G. Remley, did not move to Williamsport until their middle years.

They were co-owners of the Coesletter Publishing Co. when they came to the city.

Donald took a position teaching mathematics and physics at the former Williamsport Dickinson Junior College just before it transitioned into Lycoming College. Ada assumed responsibility for running their publishing business. Her husband is quoted in a newspaper article as saying, “I leave the Coesletter Publishing Company business up to my wife.”

Coesletter Publishing Co.

The original owner of Coesletter Publishing had offered two titles — “Leaves of Gold” and “Rainbows” — to a very limited market. These inspirational works were sold to funeral directors, who presented the books to bereaved families. The Remleys acquired the business in 1941 for some what of a fluke. When Donald Remley had been forced to give up teaching temporarily because of an extended illness, he had become a salesman for the Coesletter company.

The owner of the company died and the business Bounded, and the Remleys purchased it in 1941.

Leaves of Gold

The approach of World War II and gas rationing posed a threat to the business as they could no longer afford traveling salesmen. But Ada found a national market for the books, starting with religious bookstores. She was especially successful with “Leaves of Gold: An Anthology of Prayers, Memorable Phrases, Inspirational Verse and Prose,” a best seller from the Coesletter Publishing Co.

When the Supreme Court banned reading from the Bible in public schools, educators viewed “Leaves of Gold” as a substitute, increasing sales even further. The business was a phenomenal success, very financially lucrative, and Ada Remley earned a reputation as a skilled businesswoman.

For many years, the books were assembled in a Williamsport facility on Walnut Street, and quite a few. Late 1960s, Lycoming College students paid their way through school by cataloging and shipping the books.

Today, eBay displays the wide range of printings, editions, and bindings that were available including a “gold deluxe” version. Additionally, a page on Facebook keeps track of the books, offering a place for “friends” to share their favorite quotes from the books.

Civic leader

Well known as a civic leader who generously shared her mone tary wealth, Remley was active in the League of Women Voters Business and Professional Women’s Club, Soroptimist Club, Clio Club, American Association of University Women, Lycoming County Community Heart Association, Lycoming County United Fund, the United Methodist Church (serving as an official delegate to three World Conferences), Williamsport Chamber of Commerce, Woman’s Club, PTA and YWCA — just to list a few. She wasn’t merely a joiner, but a leader, holding many posi tions of responsibility within these organizations.

Remley served on the executive committee of the Lycoming College board of trustees. She also was a member of the board of trustees for Pine Street United Methodist Church with the position of treasurer.

She was one of the first women to hold these positions. In meetings, her words were respected. She spoke frankly about her views, and her insights were progressive.

When she retired from the board of trustees of Lycoming College in 1978, after a decade of service, she was cited as someone who provided “wise counsel, maternal wisdom, regular attention to campus needs and unflagging encouragement to all college students.”

Faculty wives

“Ada Remley named her home on Vailmont Drive to various groups, especially the wives of Lycoming College faculty members.

Her beautiful silver serving dishes, Spode china for daily use, and a standing order each week for a fresh flower bouquet from Nevill Florists had many of the young women in awe.

It was at one of these gatherings that the Faculty Wives of Lycoming College (now called the Women of Lycoming College to reflect the growing number of women faculty and administrators) came about.

Through this organization, founded in 1949, the women not only formed closer associations with each other, but also enjoyed cultural and social activities together. They supported the college with various fundraising events, including fashion shows and producing and acting in plays, and reached out to individual students who needed emotional or financial support.

Remley’s name figures prominently in early faculty work activities. In her memory, a financial award named the Ada B. Remley Memorial Scholarship is still given each year to a female in the junior class with outstanding academic performance and community involvement.

Remley raised two children, traveled the world and lived to know two great-great grandchildren. She and her husband celebrated 50 years of marriage with 300 friends and family at the Woman’s Club where they were avid bridge players.

She was a business woman and humanitarian whose approach to life might be described by a quote from a离开 letter of Leaves of Gold. “Whatever your hands find to do, that do with all the might that is in you.”
